

Week 16: Story

BIG IDEA

Story itself originates from God: because we bear his image, we can tell great stories, and that is another pointer to his existence. This lesson closes the unit, and with the curriculum half over, leaders are urged to run a simple 'midterm' evaluation of how the year is going.

KEY POINTS FROM THE LEADER VIDEO

- Students need to see that story originates from God himself; our ability to tell great stories comes from reflecting his image, another pointer that God exists.
- A fun approach: take stories, your own, students', a book, or a movie, and find the redemptive and salvation themes buried within them.
- You are officially halfway through the curriculum, so it is time to evaluate; call it your midterm, with two simple suggestions.
- First, have students pick a favorite lesson or topic and teach it back or lead a discussion; accurately communicating it back proves they got it.
- Second, look at where you got stuck: do more research, find an additional video, or bring in an apologetics expert from the list at awyam.org.
- Awana is there to help by email or social media, including the In Two Minutes video series where students can ask further questions.

DISCUSSION QUESTIONS

1. Where do you see redemptive or salvation themes in a favorite book or movie?
2. What does our love of storytelling suggest about the God whose image we reflect?
3. Which lesson from this year could you teach back to the group in your own words?
4. Which topic has your group been stuck or uncomfortable on, and what would help unstick it?
